DESCRIPTION Flint Floor Vague area of enormous concentrations of flint flakes. No evident physical boundry, but only a finds zone. For the purposes of both easier excavation and better recording this area was divided into 4 quadrants and the finds allocated thus. A great number of finds had already been logged from this area before it

ASSOCIATED FEATURES

ASSOCIATED FINDS leaf shaped arrowheads

~~COMMENT~~ was given a feature number. Even within this feature there was an area which again stood out as being over abundant in the ammount of flint found there. From the very small size of most of the flakes, plus the finding of a few complete leaf-shaped arrowheads and a large number of pieces of flint which look like failed arrowheads, it can be assumed for the present that this was specifically an arrowhead chipping floor
